For most health care purposes, your consent to use your health information is implied as a result of your consent to treatment, unless you tell us otherwise. We may also collect, use and share your health information in order to communicate or consult with other health care providers about your care unless you tell us you do not want us to do so.

There are other circumstances where we are not allowed to assume we have your consent to share information. For example, we must have permission to give your health information to people who do not provide you with health care, like your insurance company or your employer. We also need your consent to use your health information for fundraising or marketing. We may also need consent to communicate with any family members or friends with whom you would like us to give more detailed information about your health.

If we ask for your consent, you may choose not to give consent. If consent is given, you may withdraw consent at any time, but the withdrawal cannot be retrospective. The withdrawal may also be subject to legal or contractual restrictions and reasonable notice.
